

HISTORY OF THE CATAWBA COUNTY LIBRARY SYSTEM

The beginnings of the Catawba County Library System story began with dedication to a distant goal by citizens of a community who foresaw what a library could mean to the county. It includes many hours of voluntary service from interested men and women.

1932 - The beginnings toward creation of a library can be traced back to a meeting of Newton's Unit 16 of the American Legion Auxiliary on March 17. Fundraising efforts began in earnest. Under the presidency of Miss Challie Brandon Hall, an appropriation of $25 was made for a public library. Miss Hall added a $1 gift of her own to the sum. From that point on the Auxiliary spurred efforts for a library. A number of events were staged to raise money for the project, including "cotton balls", cotillions, pageants, floats in the Soldiers Reunion parades, and rummage sales.

1935 - A site for the facility was gained when the late George McCorkle offered the use of two rooms in the kitchen wing of his old family home, which stood on the southwest corner of the Court Square in Newton. The first library was housed in the historic home, overlooking a small garden at the rear of the house, through which the early library patrons entered. The library occupied the property rent-free for several years until new owners acquired the McCorkle house.

1936 - After a public drive for book donations, the formal opening of the library was arranged for March 17, 1936, exactly four years after the plan was conceived; however, due to inclement weather of that year, the opening actually was held on March 20, and books were put in circulation on April 1. During its early years the library was owned and operated by the volunteer service of the Legion Auxiliary.

1936 - Miss Challie Brandon Hall served as the first librarian. She held that position from 1936 to 1948.

1938 - In order that the library might become more serviceable to rural Catawba County, the library board sought a bookmobile. A school bus was turned over to the Auxiliary for that purpose. The first trip was made on February 18, 1938.

1939 - In July 1939, the commissioners appropriated $2,000 for buying and equipping a Catawba County Bookmobile to be operated by the Newton Public Library.

1941 - In 1941 the Auxiliary turned the library over to the Catawba County Board of Commissioners for public financing and expansion. A Library Board of Trustees was named.

1945 - At the conclusion of World War II, the members of the American Legion undertook the creation of a Catawba County War Memorial Center to be located on property adjacent to the Legion building on South Brady Avenue (today the Mary Elizabeth Hardister Recreation Center of the City of Newton.) In addition to a war memorial listing those Catawbans who had lost their lives during World Wars One and Two, the Memorial Center was to include the historic Matthias Barringer house, a two-story log dwelling dating to 1790 and originally located two miles southeast of Newton. The house had served as Catawba County's first courthouse in 1843. The building was to be moved to Newton, restored and used for the library's second home.

1946 - On August 15, 1946 (Soldiers Reunion Day), the unique public facility was dedicated in formal ceremonies. North Carolina governor R. Gregg Cherry was the speaker. A large stone fireplace, wormy chestnut paneling and colonial furnishings inside the library reflected the atmosphere of the log house. An addition had been constructed as a children's room. Upstairs over the library was the first county historical museum.

1948 - Librarian Challie Hall was succeeded by George Linder (1948-1956).

1948 - A library station was opened in Maiden in November 1948. This station, the library's first branch, was open on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. It was located in the Maiden Beauty Shop.

1952 - Tragedy struck the Catawba County Library in Newton during the early morning hours of February 25, 1952, when fire nearly demolished the historic old structure. All books, newspapers, periodicals and other materials owned by the library, except those in circulation and on the bookmobile, were destroyed. The library was moved into temporary quarters in the business district of Newton while plans went forward for the construction of a new library building. After a fundraising campaign, construction began on a modern-style one-story unit on a site at the corner of North College Avenue and East Second Street in Newton.

1954 - Construction began in early 1954 and the facility was opened to the public on September 1, 1954.

1956 – Bill Wilkinson was named Library Director (1 year).

1957 – Mary Summers was named Library Director (1957-1972).

1970 - As the 1960's drew to a close, it became increasingly apparent that a new library building was required. The increasing stock of books, magazines, newspapers, films, sound recordings and other lendable materials gradually used up space needed for adult and youth reading areas. Plans took shape for a new facility after consultations with representatives of the State Library and library architectural consultants. The result was a project to construct a new building to offer facilities for a growing public library that would be adequate to serve the county's citizens for several decades.
